Raven Bowen – a Master’s Student in the School of Criminology at Simon Fraser University, Vancouver, B.C. established many projects and programs that reduced violence and predation experienced by sex workers in cooperation with government and law enforcement officials.

Raven has many community-based publications to her credit (visit: <http://bccec.wordpress.com> for publications), including, i) “Research Ethics: A Guide for Community Organizations”, in which Raven collaborated with sex workers and academics to establish ethical parameters for researchers conducting projects with sex workers, in keeping with the Tri Council Policy Statement. ii) “Human Trafficking, Sex Work Safety and the 2010 Games: Assessments and Recommendations”, for the Sex Industry Worker Safety Action Group, which explored human trafficking and hallmark events, in preparation for the 2010 Vancouver Olympic Games (available at the Vancouver Police Departments’ website: <http://vancouver.ca/police/assets/pdf/reports-policies/report-human-trafficking-2010-games.pdf>).

Lindsay Monk - Lindsay Monk is a Master of Arts candidate in the School of Environmental Studies at the University of Victoria. Her academic research is focused on First Nations’ housing and the ways in which First Nations are engaging the problem of housing.

Housing plays a crucial role in family well-being and greater representation and responsibility for women in housing could have a restorative effect on familial relations, gender issues, and overall well being of the community. The aim with this research is to examine how the efforts of First Nations, and First Nations women in particular, can be supported and sustained to enable their engagement with housing to facilitate a wider change.

Lindsay graduated from Queen’s University in 2006, earning a B.A.H with a dual concentration in Environmental Studies and History and began her work with the federal government soon after graduation. She was chosen as the federal representative on the Canadian Housing and Renewal Association’s Youth Steering Committee for the 2010 Congress and continues to volunteer with the organization.

Improved housing on reserves will have obvious benefits for families including improved health, and the involvement of women in improving housing on reserves can also empower these women to act more effectively on wider issues within their community. It is this empowerment process that Lindsay intends to pursue following completion of this project, with a career in focused capacity development working with and for women in the improvement of living conditions on reserves.

Blanca Haydee Lopez de Brizuela is a Juris Doctor (LLB) candidate at the University of Ottawa. She is a lawyer and a former judge from El Salvador. Blanca completed a Master in Legal Studies at Carleton University. Her research “En-gender-ing Gender Sensitive Decisions: A Challenge for Decision-makers” draws on the issue of the impact of gender discrimination and domestic violence in refugee cases.

Two things are the cornerstones in Blanca’s life: her family and her commitment to social justice for the advancement of women. Blanca is a mother of six sons. She and her family came to Canada seeking protection ten years ago. As a single mother and as a refugee, Blanca knows the struggles women face in order to survive. Her experiences have taught her how to combine work with compassion and how to balance family and professional life.

“Our Unspoken Stories: The Stories of Butterflies” is a book that Blanca has co-authored with the Women and War program coordinator at the Sexual Assault Support Centre of Ottawa (SASC). Some of the stories will be featured at the Women’s World 2011 Conference (<http://www.womensworlds.ca/>) in Ottawa. In her capacity as the Women of Colour Outreach Coordinator, for SASC, Blanca has supported women survivors of violence, rape, torture and trauma. She also worked as a settlement counselor for Catholic Immigration Centre and volunteered with the Community Legal Clinics in Ottawa, helping women in their immigration and settlement processes. Her choice of pursuing a law degree in Canada was the result of those experiences.

Sophia Colantonio graduated with summa cum laude from the University of Ottawa, in Biology. She is a promising young medical scholar and leader, with a very strong research interest in Clinical medicine and public health.

A well rounded student all throughout school, Sophia also played competitive soccer and was a volunteer in her community, providing education and support to young teens about health and healthy lifestyle choices through Planned Parenthood. A high performing values driven physician in training, Sophia is determined to make a difference in the lives of Canadian women and children through medicine and public health. To be able to contribute her skills and abilities to the fullest, she is working on her Doctorate of Medicine at the University of Ottawa and is completing a Master’s degree in Public Health at Yale University. This will serve her to good advantage as a future clinician where she hopes to apply the valuable lessons of prevention and population health improvement in her future work as a practicing clinician. Eventually, Sophia Colantonio envisages not only a leadership role in medicine, but also a teaching one, where she can impart the lessons an interdependent world, with her knowledge of bench science and medicine.
